Concept Note

The Indian struggle for independence from the British colonial rule is marked with different colours. We come across divergent views and methods from our leaders who sacrificed their lives to earn freedom. Subhas Chandra Bose was one such a great leader by spirit and acts that has come down to us through an exemplary act of organising people in and outside India to rouse the revolt against the atrocities and suppressions inflicted by the imperialistic government. The foundation of Indian National Army (INA) during the World War II with the aid of Japan and the Axis Power organised Indians across different countries of the world along with the people from India to engage in a direct battle with the British. This act of direct revolution by the INA and other protests led by the leaders of the country compelled the British Crown to leave India for the Indians.

It has been almost seven decades since India gained independence and the country has progressed at a faster pace. The nation has been growing economically and socially and is heading to achieve the world leadership. If freedom fighters like Subhas Chandra Bose had not contributed in the freedom struggle, the current situation of the country would have been different, India, the democratic republic, might not have headed for success. We are independent and free today only because of the efforts and sacrifices made by our country's freedom fighters. Therefore, remembering Netaji Subhas Chandra Bose's ideas and sacrifices for building the nation is to remember that the country is visualised to be placed at par with the strongest nation of the world.
